Dear Project Manager:

You are busy, so I'll keep it short. There know question that the ongoing Western drought is putting enormous pressure on the Colorado river. Something must be done, but the action taken should accommodate the needs of all stakeholders. I have studied the plans submitted to the BOR and the 3588 plan establishes a way forward that recognizes the need for change and offers reasonable compromises among all Colorado river water users while ensuring that the river can continue to meet our growing needs into the future. If you haven't been acquainted with the plan I encourage you to do so and then advocate for it's implementation by the BOR.

Sincerely,

Ryan Robinson
