

Date of Dam Road Opening Not Known

Date of opening of the highway across the top of Boulder dam to general travel has not yet been decided upon, and may not be until fall, bureau of reclamation engineers announced this morning.

Construction of the highway itself, will be completed about July 15, but several problems are involved in opening it to the general public.

There is considerable construction work remaining to be completed, it is pointed out, and travel across the top of the dam would interfere materially — particularly on account of the wide publicity already given the route, and the probability that it will attract a huge amount of travel from the start.

Some system of patrolling the highway in the dam area, and guarding against any interference with the construction program must be worked out before the highway is finally thrown open.