Extra hour for lunch on a dam that spans time

The Hoover Dam straddles an hour's time difference

QUESTION: Is there anybody who has to cross a time-zone boundary in their regular daily journey to work?

IT MIGHT be possible to get yourself an extended lunch hour, or a very short one, if you were employed on the Hoover Dam, which straddles the Arizona-Nevada border, and crossed it to pick up your sandwiches. There is a one-hour time difference spanning the 415 yards between both ends of the dam.

There would also seem to be possibilities of short shifts or generous overtime, depending on where one clocked on and off.
