No charges in man's death at Hoover Dam

There will be no charges in the death of an 86-year-old California tourist who was killed Saturday after he was struck by a bus near Hoover Dam.

Kenneth Garberson of Laton was walking in a parking lot on the Nevada side of the Hoover Dam when he accidentally backed into a bus, said Robert Walsh, Bureau of Reclamation spokesman.

The man was pulled under the right front tire of the bus and crushed. He was taken by emergency helicopter to University Medical Center and died there shortly after the 3:40 p.m. accident.

The driver of the bus, whose name was not released, was pulling out of the parking lot when Garberson was hit, and was driving about 5 mph, Walsh said.
