

Ferryman Beats Trouble on River

---

Difficulties at the hands of "Ol' Man Colorado," with the rising of the Boulder dam lake have been solved as far as the Boulder dam ferry is concerned, Paul Swartz, of the ferry, announced this morning.

The ferry station, which has been located on the river bank, is now arranged so that it will float on barrels, and be maintained at the lake's level, Swartz said this morning. The operation was completed several days ago.

The Boulder dam ferry is to be tied up for several days due to the fact that the propellor system by which the barges will be operated, are now being installed.