

Dam Is Featured In Radio Program

The building of Boulder dam and its effect on the country nearby, was dramatized in rather startling fashion last evening for the Pacific Coast Borax company's regular presentation before the NBC microphone of "Death Valley Days."

The story purported to be the later life of "Sagebrush Pete" veteran prospector who had resided on the "Big Bend" of the Colorado river for fifty years, and chronicled his experiences during the construction of the dam.

The project itself, the lake, and future possibilities, were vividly described during the half hour program.
