

John Page Given Washington Post

10-4-35
John C. Page, former office engineer of the Boulder canyon project for the bureau of reclamation, has been appointed chief of the Washington, D. C., office of the engineering division, according to word received in Boulder today.

Page left several months ago for Washington to accept the new post, which has now been made an official appointment by Dr. Elwood R. Mead, bureau of reclamation commissioner.

Page, accompanied by his family, came to Boulder City from Grand Junction, Colorado, at the start of construction here. He held the post of office engineer in Boulder City for nearly four years before he was called to Washington to take up duties there.
