

Tyro Co-Eds Given Run Off Reserve

Magazine Subscription Seekers Shooed Away By Chief of Police

Ten charming American beauties, young and full of ambition to become co-eds at some western college, failed to make even a slight dent in the official rigidity of Chief of Police Bud Bodell of Boulder City this morning, and while he was rather sympathetic with their ambitions, he was forced to round them up, one by one, and send them on their way out into the cruel world without so much as one new order to show for their foray into Uncle Sams Boulder dam reservation.

For solicitors of all sorts, kinds and descriptions are taboo within the confines of the dam workings, even to beautiful young women with collegiate ambitions.

Somehow, under the skilful guidance of one F. A. Keene the party landed in the heart of town, and the ten young ladies had already started to filter thru the community when their mission was discovered.

Up to noon, six of them had been loaded back into the car, and deputies were busily engaged in locating the remaining four. They were soliciting subscriptions to magazines for which they received votes to go to college, and as one of the party put it "we expected to find this place a virtual paradise—for there are just hundreds of men who would help us."
