Building In Use

2/15/32

The Bureau of Reclamation Administration building is partially occupied, the field engineering offices formerly located at the government camp having been moved there this week end.

Though the main offices have not yet been put into use by the office force now holding forth in the Beckley building, a number of the rooms are now in use, and moving in of furniture, equipment and files will continue for some few weeks, until the entire government organization is centralized there for the entire project.

More than 20 government men have moved into the federal dormitory, just east of the administration building, since Saturday morning, and others are moving in.
