

Gallison Eats

Big Rock Candy

Mountains Here

The "Big Rock Candy mountains" were on the Hoover dam reservation until Norman S. Gallison ate them all.

A sightseer entered Gallison's office in the Six Company office building. He got acquainted.

Soon the public and press relations man invited him to look over his sample "pretty rocks" from down Black canyon way.

As they fingered over the specimens on the table, what was the visitor's surprise to see Gallison bounce one on the table, then calmly bite into it, masticate it and swallow it.

"Have one," Gallison invited his guest.

The guest picked up one and munched it. But he had picked the wrong kind. It was a genuine rock, not candy.

This game lasted for some weeks, until the supply of candy ran out, and Gallison's victims were many.
