

Worker Was Not Drowned With 249 Other Men

249/325/32
Harry D. Jones was not drowned with 249 other Hoover dam workers.

He's very much alive and well, in fact.

E. S. Jones, of Pittsburgh, Kansas, grew panicky when he heard there that 250 men had been drowned by a flood on the Hoover dam project.

He wrote to N. S. Gallison, director of public and press relations for Six Companies Inc.; "We read in the paper where 250 men were drowned in a tunnel. Let us know if H. D. Jones was working in that tunnel."

Gallison wrote back that Jones lives in Dorm 1 Room 236, and is still in good health, furthermore, no men were drowned in the flood.
