

For instance if there are two more outstanding engineers in the United States than Walker R. Young, construction engineer on the Boulder Canyon project for the bureau of reclamation and Frank T. Crowe, construction superintendent for Six Companies, I haven't heard of them. Each is preeminent in his own field, and each holds THE key position in constructing the world's greatest engineering and power project, in their particular field, which is the project itself. And yet neither is listed in the Blue Book. There are scores of others in Boulder City who most certainly rate the same mention as others included in the book. The same thing applies to Las Vegas, to a somewhat lesser degree. There is only ONE Boulder Canyon project. There are many Las Vegas' scattered thruout the nation. But considering those recognized in other communities, this city should rate at least eight or ten instead of just one.
