Every bona-fide ex-service man in this area who wants to work has been provided with a job on the Boulder canyon project, it was announced this morning by Leonard T. Blood, in charge of the government bureau in Las Vegas.

"The Boulder Canyon project act and the contract subsequently signed provides that preference shall be given to ex-service men, and if there are any who can establish their service connection by proper identification and their discharge papers, let them call at the office—we'll put them to work," Blood said.

Blood revealed further that between sixty and eighty men a day had been put to work on the project during the past week or two, most of them being replacements.
