

"Back To Nature" Movement Starts In B. C. -- And It Ain't Nudism, Mugg

A movement which might easily be termed a "back to nature" one appears to have started in Boulder City.

Mention was made several days ago about the "swift" foxes who are being fed by the rangers at the reservation gate each night, and which have become quite tame.

R. V. Blair, Six Companies Inc. employe, has a species of desert fox which he captured at the nix nearly two months ago. The fox, gray in color, is called "Caesar," although it looks more like Caesar's ghost. The animal, which has become rather intimate with the family cat, has grown and seems to thrive as though in the care of Mother Nature. According to Blair, Caesar simply dotes on pineapple and cottage cheese. Watermelon is another of its favorite foods.

Last, but not least, is good old Payday, a purple turtle of ancient vintage, which hangs out at the Journal office anon, and which is in the possession of Biz of Bunkhouse fame.

"Back to Nature" we calls it. Ain't it.
