San Bernardino Registers
Coldest Night With 23
Above

Broken water pipes, others clogged with ice and refusing to give forth the usual morning's quantity, and frozen auto radiators were left in the wake of the sudden cold spell that fell on Las Vegas day before yesterday and reached its climax late last night and early this morning.

The thermometer started falling shortly after the sun went down last night and continued its drop until about four o'clock this morning when it sank to its lowest level—10 degrees above zero. This reading came from the farm bureau's thermometer. The government mercury, in care of C. P. Squires, veteran weather observer, read slightly higher.

THE LOW tied a record set December when a temperature of 10 above was recorded.
