

COMING SOON

A film documentary about the California Water Crisis

The Fight for Water

This film is coming soon to the Central Valley.

Keep California Farming gave our film, "Two Thumbs UP! This is the MOST important documentary film for California Agriculture for the Year!"

The Fight for Water is a documentary about a water issue that unified an entire farming community!

On April 14, 2009, a California Central Valley filmmaker sets out to film a historical water march that takes farmers and farm workers, along with a coalition of Latinos (lead by Hollywood comedian turned activist Paul Rodriguez), across the heart of the California Central Valley, to demand that their water restrictions be overturned and that their water supply be turned back on because water is their means of survival.

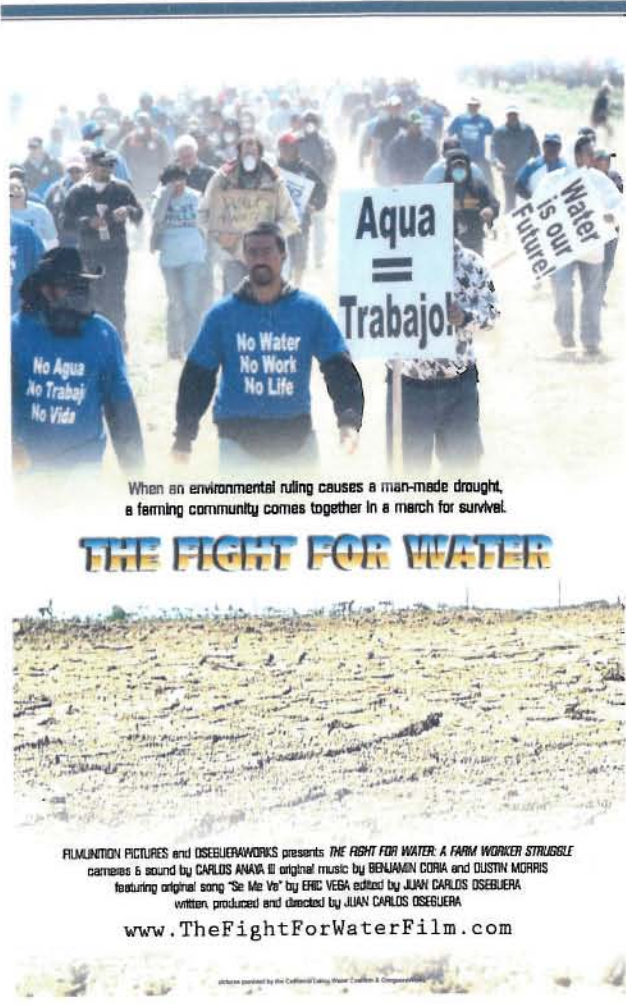

The film interviews the people who were most affected--to bring about their voice, their struggle-- into a unified story of survival!

The filmmaker also happened to live in the impacted part of the valley, and found a deep connection to the farm worker community and their struggle.

Malcom Media Ag Reporter, Patrick Cavanaugh, just gave us also a great review of the film!: "This is an URGENT Movie to watch. [The filmmaker] captures the severe pain of the San Joaquin Valley due to unbelievable and unforgivable Congressional Drought!"

Support our film by visiting the film's website and learning more about it.

There you can see a film trailer and stay up to date on possible film screenings in the area.
