

A team of Idaho State University students carefully brush and clean a mammoth skull discovered near American Falls Reservoir early last week. The specimen was excavated and transferred from the site to the Idaho Museum of Natural History in Pocatello, Idaho on Oct. 18. (l to r) Casey Dooms, Adam Clegg, Jeff Castro, and Travis Helm.

Bureau of Reclamation Photo by Dave Walsh

10/16/2014

Idaho State University Geology student Travis Helm brushes clean a mammoth skull discovered near American Falls Reservoir early last week. It was excavated and transferred from the site to the Idaho Museum of Natural History in Pocatello, Idaho on Oct. 18.

Using fine brushes Idaho State University students Casey Doms and Jeff Castro brush clean a mammoth skull discovered near American Falls Reservoir early last week. It was excavated and transferred from the site to the Idaho Museum of Natural History in Pocatello, Idaho on Oct. 18.

Bureau of Reclamation Photo by Dave Walsh

10/16/2014

Idaho State University students Travis Helm and Jeff Castro apply plaster to a mammoth skull specimen discovered near American Falls Reservoir early last week. To protect the fossil it was encased in plaster and transferred from the site to the Idaho Museum of Natural History in Pocatello, Idaho on Oct. 18.